

Designing and constructing a building is a complex task. But try doing that in Antarctica, the world's harshest climate in the world! Below is a model of the British Antarctic Survey's new Discovery Building. Once completed it will be where our scientists carry out their research work, live and relax.

Draw in the space below what features you would include if you were designing this building for our scientists in Antarctica.

